Introduction

The Faculty of Law at Queen's University boasts some of the finest legal scholars in Canada. And as the pages of this Annual Report make clear, our scholars are also among the most productive legal scholars anywhere. This Report lists the scholarly activities and research achievements of the Queen's Faculty of Law in 2014. It was another prolific and impressive year for Queen's Law faculty members, who published dozens of books, chapters, and journal articles on an enormously diverse range of topics in law and on topics that cross disciplinary lines. Our faculty members also presented their research at conferences around the globe, and they hosted visits from prominent scholars from many countries to the Faculty of Law.

- Michael Pratt, Associate Dean (Graduate Studies & Research)

During 2014, 16 books and 23 book chapters written or edited by Queen's Law faculty members were published or translated into other languages. Over 30 journal articles covered topics including child welfare, wrongful conviction, animal citizenship and climate law.

Approximately 150 papers and presentations were delivered at conferences and workshops ranging from the International Society of Family Law conference in Tel Aviv to the Stockholm Arbitration Summit in Stockholm, Sweden.

Studies and reports to judicial, governmental and legislative bodies addressed such topics as youth justice and visible minority youth, the disability accommodation gap in employment, foreign account tax compliance, and medical malpractice.

Queen's Law hosted conferences and workshops on Arctic/Northern Women (FLSQ); Union Participation on Boards of Directors (CLCW); and Workplace Pensions (CLCW).

In addition, the Faculty of Law hosted over 20 distinguished visitors from around the world, who spoke on topics including regulatory state paternalism in corporate law, the law of restitution, the needs of children facing parental incarceration, and comparative federalism – to cite a few examples.

Interdisciplinary research is among the distinctive strengths of Queen's Law. Many of our scholars undertake work in cognate disciplines, and collaborate with researchers in other fields.

Three new faculty members joined our ranks in 2014, further enriching the scholarly strength at Queen's Law. Grégoire Webber has been named the Canada Research Chair in Public Law and Philosophy of Law. Jean Thomas also adds to our strength in the field of legal philosophy and Nicolas Lamp in the area of public international law. With new faculty members being welcomed in 2015, the depth and range of our research capacity and reputation is on course to accelerate even further in the years ahead.
