Introduction

This report lists the scholarly activities and research achievements of the Queen’s Faculty of Law in 2012 and 2013. During this time, Queen’s Law faculty members contributed to scholarly research in a significant way, through numerous book, chapter and article publications, lending their expertise through commentary in the media and through reports and submissions to government. They also presented at conferences and hosted many visitors to the Faculty of Law.

During 2012/13, over 25 books and 40 book chapters written or edited by Queen’s Law faculty members were published or translated into other languages, including Chinese, Portuguese, German, Korean, Polish, Spanish, Japanese, Turkish, and French. Over 80 journal articles covered topics including the concept of ‘parent’ in family law, expert evidence in criminal cases, and prison healthcare, among many others.

Approximately 300 papers and presentations were delivered at conferences and workshops ranging from the International Women’s Rights Action Watch Asia Pacific Expert Group Meeting in Beirut to Resolving Tax Treaty Disputes at the London School of Economics. Studies and reports to judicial, governmental and legislative bodies addressed such topics as tax evasion, corruption, the economic prospects for Canadian girls, parental relocation, and the Yukon Justice of the Peace Program.

Queen’s Law hosted 10 conferences and workshops on issues ranging from Arctic/Northern Women: Situating Law and Justice in Development and Equality (Feminist Legal Studies Queen’s); adjudicating human rights in the workplace, privacy and aging (Centre for Law in the Contemporary Workplace); Criminal Law, Immigration and Surveillance (jointly convening with the Queen’s Surveillance Studies Centre); and private law theory.

In addition, the Faculty of Law hosted 55 distinguished visitors from around the world, who engaged faculty members and students in lively conversations on American capitalism, copyright law, the treatment of ethnic and religious minorities, aboriginal identities, violence against women and legal subjectivity for animals – to cite a few examples.

Interdisciplinary and international collaborations are distinctive strengths of Queen’s Law with numerous faculty members leading or contributing to interdisciplinary research projects. Cross-appointments within the Faculty include Professors Will Kymlicka and Michael Pratt with the Department of Philosophy, Professor Richard Chaykowski with the School of Policy Studies, Professor David Lyon with the Department of Sociology, Professors Sharryn Aiken, Bita Amani and Kathy Lahey with Cultural Studies, and the shared, fractional appointment of Professor Les Green with Oxford University.

Queen’s Law faculty members actively participate in the scholarly community, and contribute at the highest level to critical scholarly analysis and public debate, both in Canada and internationally. The faculty pursues excellence in legal scholarship in diverse areas and from diverse perspectives. With new faculty members being welcomed in 2014, the depth and range of our research capacity and reputation is on course to accelerate even further in the years ahead.
